TO: CDCA BOARD EXAMINATION PATIENTS

The successful completion of a written and clinical “board” examination is required by most states before anyone is issued a license to practice dentistry or dental hygiene in that state. Since you have agreed to be a “board patient” during such an examination, there is information The Ohio State University College of Dentistry wants you to thoroughly understand.

The Ohio State University College of Dentistry does not sponsor, schedule, administer or monitor these board examinations, even when given here. Upon request we simply make our building and dental facilities available to the examining agency, as do most dental schools. Therefore, any agreement you make with the student (or former student) relative to the board examination is strictly between the two of you. For example, the College of Dentistry does not assume any responsibility for such things as the loss of wages, parking, the expense of travel, food, and/or lodging while acting as a “board patient”. The College of Dentistry does not assume any responsibility for the treatment, the completion of treatment, or the follow up care for treatment attempted or completed during a “board” examination. Finally, the College of Dentistry does not assume any responsibility for the payment of any fees required by the examining agency or for providing the facility for the examination.

I have read and understand the statements written above.
